Deck Covers

Your deck cover is the finishing touch to your project and will usually become the dominating visual feature. There are many design options and brands available for you to choose from. Treat your deck cover as a separate project, and take a little time to choose design and brand carefully.

Do I build the Deck Cover at the same time as the Deck?

Choose carefully when you add your new deck cover, as this design will significantly affect how pleasing the end result will be. The correct deck cover will be the difference between an 'add-on' looking 'lid' and a superbly design and finished extension to your home. It is often better to wait until the deck is built before deciding on the type of deck cover. This will allow you to visualise the end result and see what type of cover best suits your lifestyle.

My Deck builder has offered to do the roof as well - if he gets the job!

This is common practice, however please do be careful. Even if it has been implied that the deck cover will be 'thrown in' for little more, perhaps even free, the simple fact is that you get what you pay for. If your proposed deck builder is already discounting to get your business, there will be precious little left for a stylish deck cover. Most certainly, what will be on offer will be either a simple timber pergola covered with roofing iron or even perhaps an inexpensive patio 'kit'. There are many of these cheaper kits, however often these are not waterproof.

My Deck is already built!

No problem! This is often the case. If Altec has not had input prior to the deck being built, we will design and engineer to suit your existing deck. Deck Cover brands have varying engineering specifications so Altec may suggest specific brands that will comply with the engineering we need to achieve the best results.
